Premiere for new European lines from Stockholm

Now Stockholmers can also fly inexpensively to Europe. FlyMe is starting direct flights to Nice and Alicante from Arlanda, and the first plane is taking off Saturday, November 18.

Since March, FlyMe has flown to eleven European tourist destinations from Landvetter Airport in Göteborg. Two of the most popular destinations are Nice on the French Riviera and Alicante on the Spanish Mediterranean coast. A strong wish from passengers for increased service with direct flights from Stockholm has become apparent over the summer, and FlyMe is now meeting this demand.

FlyMe's newly appointed commercial director, Mats Jacobsson, provides the following comments on the new routes:

"It feels good to be able to offer our passengers in and around Stockholm the opportunity to fly inexpensively to Europe. We are presently flying from Stockholm, to and from Göteborg and Malmö. We are now adding international flights from Stockholm, which is a part of both our increase in service and our strategic expansion plans."

There are also plans to further increase the total number of international destinations from Stockholm before next summer. Which destinations these concern will soon be announced when the summer schedule is released.

FlyMe is Sweden's low-price airline and travelers from Stockholm will soon be able to take advantage of the low prices on direct flights to Europe. Trips to Nice are priced at SEK 599 and SEK 799 to Alicante, including taxes and fees. The first flights to the two destinations will depart from Arlanda on November 18. Tickets can be booked now at www.flyme.com.

There will be two departures weekly to Nice (Wednesdays and Saturdays), and one weekly departure to Alicante (Saturdays). The number may increase before the summer of 2007.
